

Academic Freedom and Freedom of Expression at BYU Law School

Academic freedom and freedom of expression are important components of the educational experience at BYU's J. Reuben Clark Law School. According to the Law School's educational objectives, we seek to "equip students with cross-cultural competence, preparing them to engage and communicate effectively across difference," as well as to foster an environment where students, staff, and faculty "engage in respectful, civil dialogue that welcomes a diversity of voices and beliefs in an environment of intellectual honesty, academic freedom, and abiding faith."

BYU Law School adheres to several BYU policies and procedures that help the Law School achieve these objectives. These include the following:

- Academic Freedom Policy
- Church Educational System Honor Code
- Demonstration Policy
- Disruptive Student Conduct Policy
- Disruptive Student Conduct Procedures
- Faculty Grievance Policy
- Law School Events Policy
- Personnel Conduct Policy
- Political Neutrality Policy
- Speakers and Events Policy

In addition to the rights and subject to the limitations specified in the above policies and procedures, BYU Law School, its students, staff, and faculty also enjoy the protections of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.
